WEBSITE WALKTHROUGH

MOLON LABE FIREARMS x SUNCITY OUTDOORS

The intro game

Everyone who lands on the site plays a few seconds of this before they see anything else. Clear enough targets and it hands out a discount code — that code has nothing to do with the giveaway, which is always free to enter.

The age check

Straight after the game, before anyone can browse. It is the age confirmation customers expect in this category, and it remembers the answer so nobody is asked twice.

The hero, as it pulls back

The top of the home page. As the customer scrolls, the shot pulls back to reveal the whole scene. It is built from still frames rather than a video, so it starts moving instantly instead of buffering.

Browsing the inventory

Everything on hand, in one list. Running a finger or a cursor down the rows brings each gun up on the right, so a customer can take in the whole case without clicking into anything.

An item page

The photos stay in place on the left while the description and specifications scroll past on the right, so the customer never loses sight of what they are reading about.

Featured, and how to enter

The gun currently up for grabs, with the entry form underneath. Anyone can enter without spending anything — that free route is what keeps the promotion lawful, so it is stated plainly rather than buried.

Running the shop from your phone

The side only you see, shot at phone size because that is where it will be used. Listing a gun, adding photos straight from the camera roll, and switching the game's discount on or off—all of it one-handed, standing at the counter.

GAME AND OFFER

Picking a winner on camera

Practice mode, so you can rehearse before going live. Names fill the screen weighted by how many entries each person holds, they slow to a stop, and one locks in. The winner is decided before the animation starts, and the line along the bottom lets anyone check the result afterwards.
